From Jeremy Nosek, Life Surge CEO:

Life Surge strongly disagrees with the characterization of our company presented in recent reporting. We will not apologize for who we are, what we believe, or the work we do.

The reporting presented serious allegations about Life Surge. What it did not present with equal force was the full story: the thousands of students whose experiences stand in stark contrast to that narrative, the extensive compliance infrastructure and safeguards we have built, and the facts and context we provided directly to the reporters before publication.

We stand behind our people. We stand behind our mission. And we stand behind the work we have done alongside Tim Tebow for years.

Tim has made the decision to pause his relationship with Life Surge while his team reviews the allegations and gathers additional facts. We respect that this is his decision to make.

Our respect for Tim has not changed.

Over the years we have worked together, we have known Tim as a man deeply committed to his faith and to serving others. He has devoted an extraordinary amount of his life to sharing the Gospel, helping people in need, fighting for the vulnerable, and using his platform to make a positive difference in the world.

Whatever questions are being raised about Life Surge, we do not believe Tim's character or lifetime of service should become collateral damage in that debate.

We love Tim. We are grateful for the years we have spent working alongside him, for the thousands of people he has encouraged from our stages, and for the Kingdom work he continues to do around the world.

As for Life Surge, we will continue to stand on the facts, stand behind our mission, and serve the people who have entrusted us with the opportunity to impact their lives.
